Sheriff's Web Site Wins Award

GMIS International, a global association of government information technologies (IT) leaders, has announced that the Henry County Sheriff's Office new web site has received the single Honorable Mention distinction in the 2011 G2 Award category.

The letter of notification stated, "GMIS International is recognizing your county for its Sheriff's website, which exemplifies exceptional ways for a government to interact with its citizens, with business, and with other governments. The International Board was very impressed with the innovative approach used by Henry County, Georgia."

"We congratulate your county for being such a fabulous role model in the public sector IT industry." The letter concluded.

Sheriff McBrayer added, "It was a well coordinated effort by my staff between the County IT department, Communications department and the Sheriff's Office." He added, "It was our knowledge of the needs of our citizens, other agencies and the judicial system coupled with the skills and talents from the other department that made this site so useful."

The Sheriff's web site is dynamic in that they continue to implement improvements and because information about the activities at the Sheriff's Office is kept fresh. Additionally, instructional (How Do I?) information is updated within hours of regulatory or procedural changes being announced.
